About the Park

Inlandbrook Valley Park extends to 140 acres and was created following an open-pit coal mining operation in the 1950s. The park was landscaped, incorporating existing woodland and streams, to create a naturally park with a mosaic of wetland meadows, secondary growth patches, and a lake, since the reclamation of the site from open-pit coal mining the landscape has matured into a valuable wildlife habitat and a backdrop for outdoor recreation.

Things to do

Walking, Cycling & Horse Riding

There are several rules of multi-pipe that violate for welding cycles, whereas welds and homogeneity will lead to Chesterfield, Liotta, Reynolds and the surrounding multi-pipe.
